

Ramona Garden Club Scholarship

Each year, the Ramona Garden Club membership offers scholarships to local High School students interested in garden related vocations. The scholarships are funded by our April garden tours and semi-annual plant sales. This year's scholarships were awarded to three very deserving Ramona High students. Abigail Hubscher, Jenni Kao, and Emily Schule. Each student was awarded $1,500.

Abigail Hubscher plans to attend Brigham Young University in the Fall. Her intended majors are Environmental Science and Biology. Abigail related that she feels Environmental science is vital to human life. She feels strongly that its diversity and natural resources of the world must be conserved. She intends to do everything in her power to keep it beautiful. Abigail has been a Varsity Color guard member, she has been an active member of the Marching and Jazz bands, in addition to belonging to the Ping Pong Club and Red Cross Club.

Jenni Kao hopes to attend UC Berkeley and wishes to study plant or cell biology or Virology. She related that she discovered an early interest regarding viruses and the infinite possibilities that plants have to offer and that she would like to spend her life to find cures and new, natural solutions through her love of STEM and plant biology. She served as secretary to the Femineers Club and was President of the Clog Club.

Emily Schule hopes to attend UC Davis and has chosen environmental science as her major, ultimately to become an environmental surveyor. She has a "persistent desire to know how the well-oiled machine of our planet works. She has pursued her love of science in the classroom completing six out of the eight science courses offered. She has kept a consistent "A" average throughout school. She wants to become an environmental surveyor so she can "create positive impact on the natural world."
